

Fed to weigh growth, inflation, Delta variant uncertainty at July meeting

By: Eric Stein, CFA | July 26, 2021

Boston - Monetary policymakers at the U.S. Federal Reserve have a lot on their minds ahead of their meeting on July 27 and July 28. The economy is generally stronger than we perceived a year or so ago — certainly the rebound from the worst of the COVID-19 pandemic has outpaced the initial expectations.

However, the delta (or rate of change) of growth — not to be confused with the COVID-19 Delta variant! — has begun to slow somewhat. In large part, that is to be expected, given that the initial 12-month comparisons for GDP growth reflected the low base of economic activity at the height of the pandemic and the massive stimulus and momentum that followed.

Nevertheless, some increment of what appears to be a slowing rate of growth can clearly be attributed to the new uncertainties around the delta variant. At the margin, some of the "higher frequency" data — like the July 22 weekly jobless claims report — is getting weaker. The tail risk that this variant of COVID-19 will cause another partial shutdown is not my base case. But the risk, in my view, is certainly higher than it was a month ago.

Inflation's surprising strength

Inflation reports continue to come in higher than expected, and the big debate in the market, among economists and at the Fed, is whether it is transitory or more durable. I don't think it's too soon to consider the sequencing of a more hawkish adjustment of policy to address tapering and Fed balance sheet growth.

July's FOMC meeting will undoubtedly address those issues, and will be followed by a press conference, as usual. On August 26, the Fed holds its annual meeting in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, with its September meeting following a few weeks later. It seems there could be a pre-announcement at either of those, then a formal announcement in November about tapering to start in December. Or the last two steps might be pushed back to a December/January framework.

Assuming the Fed does initiate its tapering, there are important nuances to consider in terms of how that would happen and the composition of purchases to be reduced. There has been a fair bit of speculation in the market that tapering of mortgage-backed securities (MBS) would take place sooner or at a faster pace than for U.S. Treasuries, in an attempt to take some of the steam out of the hot real estate market. But that met with pushback from some Fed officials, who indicated that tapering of Treasuries and MBS would be evenly split.

Bottom line: After many months of speculation about a postpandemic Fed monetary policy, I believe the pace of progress from "talking" to "doing" is very likely to accelerate in the second half of the year.

Eric Stein, CFA
Chief Investment Officer
Fixed Income
Eaton Vance Management

"Inflation reports continue to come in higher than expected, and I don't think it's too soon to consider the sequencing of a more hawkish adjustment of policy to address tapering and balance sheet growth."

The views expressed in these posts are those of the authors and are current only through the date stated. These views are subject to change at any time based upon market or other conditions, and Eaton Vance disclaims any responsibility to update such views. These views may not be relied upon as investment advice and, because investment decisions for Eaton Vance are based on many factors, may not be relied upon as an indication of trading intent on behalf of any Eaton Vance strategy. The discussion herein is general in nature and is provided for informational purposes only. There is no guarantee as to its accuracy or completeness.

To report a website vulnerability, please go to Responsible Disclosure.

Eaton Vance is part of Morgan Stanley Investment Management, the asset management division of Morgan Stanley.

The information on this Web site is for U.S. residents only. The information on this Web site does not constitute an offer to sell, or a solicitation of an offer to purchase, securities in any jurisdiction to any person to whom it is not lawful to make such an offer.

There are no guarantees regarding the achievement of investment objectives, target returns, portfolio construction, allocations or measurements such as alpha, tracking error, stock weightings and other information ratios. The views and strategies described may not be suitable for all investors. Not all of Eaton Vance's recommendations have been or will be profitable. Eaton Vance does not provide tax or legal advice. Investing entails risks and there can be no assurance that Eaton Vance (and its affiliates) will achieve profits or avoid incurring losses. Prospective investors should consult with a tax or legal advisor before making any investment decision.

NOT FDIC INSURED | OFFER NO BANK GUARANTEE | MAY LOSE VALUE | NOT INSURED BY ANY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AGENCY | NOT A DEPOSIT

© Eaton Vance Management. All rights reserved. Two International Place, Boston, MA 02110.