Why muni investors may want to go long for yield, despite record lows

By: Evan Rourke, CFA | August 28, 2020

New York - One of the challenges for investors in today's municipal bond market is the level of yields. The Municipal Market Data AAA Scale doesn't offer a 1% handle until 2034. Even though relative value remains attractive, with AAA municipals yielding over 100% of Treasurys all along the yield curve, absolute yields are uninspiring.

Are the values of premium muni bonds worth the cost to investors?

By: Christopher J. Harshman, CFA | July 30, 2020

New York - Municipal bonds priced at a premium — any price above $100 — may prompt some investors to wonder why they would willingly pay more than $100 (also known as par) for a bond that may eventually mature and return only $100. A common question related to this scenario is, "If I pay $120 and get only $100 back, then what happens to my premium?"
