Calvert Issue Brief: Power and utility ESG lessons from California

By: John Miller | September 14, 2020

Climate change-related investment risk in California is high, particularly in electric utilities. However, sustained demand for renewable generation, energy storage, energy efficiency and regional transmissions development represent growth areas for ESG-oriented investment. This issue brief details Calvert's work on this critical issue in the past, as well as what Calvert is doing today.

World Bank report scandal highlights the need for independent EM research

By: Emerging Markets Debt Team | September 2, 2020

Boston - On August 27, the World Bank suspended publication of its flagship "Doing Business" report, which has been viewed as one of the premier international rankings. The 2020 report ranked 190 countries based on the ease of doing business, grading each on a sample of 41 metrics such as starting a business, dealing with construction permits and registering property.

Power and utility ESG lessons from California

By: John Miller | September 15, 2020

Washington - Searing, sustained triple-digit temperatures across the West and Southwest forced the operators of California's largest grid system to administer rolling outages on August 14 and then again on August 15. Affecting more than two million customers on a nonsimultaneous basis, the blackouts were California's first nonwildfire-related disconnections since the Enron debacle of 2001.¹

Upcoming US election has major implications on tax policy and geopolitics

By: Eric Stein, CFA | September 9, 2020

Boston - In the US presidential election, the polls have tightened over the past several weeks and market-implied betting probabilities have started to close. At this point, however, I think Joe Biden should still be considered the frontrunner.

Calvert Issue Brief: eCommerce

By: Leah Moehlig, CFA | & Hellen Mbugua | June 23, 2020

The increase in demand for e-commerce over the past few years, which took another leap forward during the COVID-19 pandemic, may either introduce or eliminate financially material ESG risks. Among the areas where ESG impacts need to be considered are labor, digitization, environment and data privacy. This issue brief addresses some of the specific ways Calvert looks at and acts upon when evaluating companies to determine whether they are balancing all stakeholder interests over the long term.
